Extraction method: extraction by steam according to a specific distillation process. Scent reminiscent of wood texture (coniferous).

The largest number of cypress varieties is mainly found in the Kyushu region as well as in the central part of the Honshu Island located in the Japanese archipelago. The notorious height of the tree coupled with its evergreen foliage denotes conifers that can reach 30m in height. This variety of conifers is also semantically known as the cypress whose etymology refers to the element of "fire", wood which is considered in Japan as one of the best qualities for building materials.

The beneficial and therapeutic benefits of xylem preservation have long been known. Its plant, for example, is used as a raw material for the very popular "breakfast box" more commonly called "bento" but also for traditional "bathtubs" as conceived by the ancestors, making this material of construction an indispensable element of the daily life in Japan, including modern chopsticks.

Moreover, these varieties of wood are renowned for their nobility as well as their robustness especially during severe weather conditions such as wind and rain as they are now used in several areas. Its durability and its resistance makes some high quality materials very often used for building materials, especially in the construction of temples and sanctuaries, which core design is mostly made out of cypress. The meticulous selection of the essential oil, which is retained during the distillation of the xylem, enables to release the powerful natural aromas of the cypress, thus offering a fresh scent invoking a purified air with soft and relaxing tones, perfect for refreshing the atmosphere but also to calm the senses.

Effects: active principle acting on the adjustment of the respiratory system, on the reduction of stress and perspiration as this oil also calms the impulses. Excellent anti-bacterial properties, this oil also has an antiseptic effect. It also helps to promote good mood in a stressful or "depressed" situation, it helps to maintain balance of the mind, calms feelings in a situation of frustration, while easing the adjustment and the balance of both sympathetic and parasympathetic systems.

A naturally sweet aroma, with scents of slight sweet and sour aromas, its perfume invokes nostalgia and quickly spreads as an aroma that appeases your senses on a daily basis.

Because of its lemon-yellow skin, there are two types of white-colored endocarps.

There is a strong bitterness at the level of the inner pericarp, which makes this essential oil a very high quality even when used in large quantities.

The essential oils of the lemon "Setouchi" are carefully extracted from peels of thin lamellae whose texture recalls the touch of the epidermis of the hand.

No pesticides are used during cultivation. By virtue of the extraction quality, the quantities of furocoumarins are very attenuated, even more so when exposed to sunlight.

In addition to promoting peace of mind, its aroma will soothe your worries, its stabilizing effect will make your mind clearer. This oil also promotes blood circulation and acts directly on the proper functioning of the digestive organs, notably via an active principle which makes it possible to neutralize alkaline acid which relieves the symptoms associated with constipation or diarrhea, in particular during a direct application on the abdomen (oil massage).

On a general note, lemon, like other citrus-based flavors, has a disinfecting action characteristic. Because of its antipyretic action, we recommend the use of this oil in the form of massage during an increase in body temperature.

Its astringent effect also makes it possible to obtain an efficacy for persons suffering from skin problems. It will treat pimples, freckles, corns and will improve skin problems in general, including ailments such as warts protecting sensitive areas around the nails, hands and feet.
